

Mobile-ize for Babies: The First 100 Days Poll

ZERO TO THREE polled Americans on what they think elected officials should do for infants, toddlers, and families during the First 100 Days in office, and asked what communities need to ensure young children's healthy development. Here's what people had to say:

74% think policymakers should increase support and funding for programs serving young children and families (e.g., cutting funds elsewhere or raising taxes).

76% think young children should be a top priority in state and federal budgets.

The conversation about what the best communities for babies provide:
